A TEEN'S SELF-REFERRAL LEADS TO SELF-SUFFICIENCY

The day-to-day struggles faced by most teens today are difficult enough. Imagine being 17-years-old, three-months pregnant, caring for your one-year-old daughter with no place to live.

This is the true story of Candyce, a girl who only 18 months ago was losing all hope for her future. Due to family conflict with her mother, Candyce developed a behavior of constantly running away, which eventually resulted in her being bounced from family member to family member.

Finally, in August of 2008, Candyce and her mother began seeking conflict intervention, counseling and a more stable environment for Candyce and her daughter. After contacting a multitude of community shelters, Candyce referred herself to Family Tree Gemini.

Family Tree Gemini is a 20-bed therapeutic residential facility providing medical and dental referrals, meals, hygiene products, transportation and a structured, supervised environment for adolescents.

After entering Family Tree Gemini, Candyce began to open up about her current fears of experimenting with drugs while pregnant with her second child, her affiliation with local gang members and, most importantly, visitation with her daughter.

Her case manager helped Candyce identify specific goals which included participating in an Independent Living Program, obtaining a job, applying for permanent housing, working towards her GED and regaining weekly visitation with her daughter. As Candyce was truly homeless and had no where else to go, her stay at Family Tree Gemini was much longer than most self-referrals. Fortunately, the time was well spent and Candyce successfully completed all of her goals before exiting the program.

Candyce is now 19-years-old and living at Bridgeway, a home providing education and support for pregnant and parenting teens. She is currently working full-time to care for her son and has regular visitation with her daughter. "Now that I'm self-sufficient, things are great," said Candyce. "My kids mean the world to me and I would not trade them for anything."

Pseudonyms have been used and photos substituted to protect the identity of this client. Story provided by Dana Juniell, Family Tree Manager of Marketing & Special Events.

Candyce referred herself to Family Tree Gemini at age 17, while three-months pregnant and caring for her one-year-old daughter.

From The CEO

Scott Shields
Family Tree CEO

This winter has provided its share of cold, wet and snowy weather, and as I reflect on Candyce and her story, I wonder how many times she was outside in unforgiving, inhospitable conditions. Where did she stay? Was she pregnant? How did she survive?

Like all Family Tree clients, Candyce's story is unique. But in this case, her story is one of many that is part of an alarming development: more and more youth self-referring themselves to Family Tree Gemini through our Runaway and Homeless Youth program. These young people are choosing to stay at Gemini so they can get off the streets, cease couch-surfing and escape conflict-ridden and unsafe homes.

Last year Family Tree experienced a distressing 45% increase in the numbers of runaway and homeless youth self-referring to Gemini. But what may be even more disturbing is that this trend continues: so far this year youth voluntarily coming to Family Tree Gemini are up more than 30% again. This trajectory is concerning, because in two years the numbers of youth seeking a safe place with people who listen and offer help, will double. Here are some additional important facts: annually Family Tree staff make more than 3,300 contacts with runaway and homeless youth through street outreach in Jefferson, Boulder and Adams counties; since October of last year we have maintained a wait list for voluntary youth placement because we are unable to meet the needs; existing funding sources cover only 60% of the necessary costs to operate the program at the current level - a level not capable of meeting the necessary demand for services.

For the majority of these youth, however, reunification with their families is not only the goal, but also achievable with help from Family Tree staff. And once home, we continue to provide case management and assistance to help ensure these families have the resources and skills to remain together. And when family reunification is not a choice, as in Candyce's situation, Family Tree is there to help these youth identify other options so they can become safe, strong and self-reliant.

We're actively seeking solutions to assist us in delivering quality outcomes that address the increasing needs of runaway and homeless youth. Please continue to join with us as we press forward in efforts to end child abuse, domestic violence and homelessness.

For safe children and families,

Scott Shields

10th Annual Volunteer Recognition Brunch

Helping people become safe, strong and self-reliant is extremely challenging and often emotionally draining work. Family Tree would not be able to meet the needs of our thousands of clients without the compassion and dedication of our volunteers.

On February 20th, Family Tree recognized seven individuals and one community group for their continued commitment to Family Tree and helping to end child abuse, domestic violence and homelessness.

Over 100 people attended the brunch at Mount Vernon Event Center, including volunteers, staff and family and friends of the award recipients.

Congratulations to the 2010 Family Tree Volunteer Recognition Award Recipients:

- Ann Baron - Outstanding Homelessness Advocate Award
- Jatinder Bhambra - Bette Tunnell Domestic Violence Advocate Award
- Holly Schutz - Outstanding At-Risk Youth Advocate Award
- Ann Richmond - Outstanding Homelessness Advocate Award
- Helen Linn - Senior Service Award
- Belva Freml - Long-Term Service Award
- Jacqueline Knez - Best New Volunteer Award
- The Golden Lions Club - Group Service Award

"Ann is so committed to our residents. She truly wants them to lead happy, healthy lives and is helping them to do so through yoga."

Donor Spotlight

Barbara Morris, MD

Barbara Morris, MD, has lived in Colorado since 1996 when her family moved here from Cincinnati, Ohio. Early on she looked for ways to connect in the community and soon made her way to Family Tree. When Barbara told the nurse practitioner she worked with that she would be volunteering at Family Tree Women In Crisis Shelter, she chose to join her. Soon Barbara recruited physicians and nurses to assist in the clinic and motivated her employer at the time, Kaiser Permanente, to support Family Tree with groups of up to 25 volunteers coming to do projects at our programs.

Dr. Morris and her family chose to support Family Tree financially as well. Barbara joined Family Tree's Board of Directors in 2005 and soon after it became clear to her that contributing dollars in addition to her skills as a physician helped meet the organization's needs. She has been a tireless supporter of Family Tree's special events and notes that being a regular donor has exponentially deepened her relationship with the organization.

Barbara's philosophy regarding philanthropy is simple - she and her family select a few organizations and develop a meaningful relationship with them. "It's like saving for college - it's not how much you give - it's that you make the decision and do it consistently."

We're so grateful for Barbara's dedication, generosity and countless hours of service. Thank you for all that you have done and continue to do in the service of Family Tree's mission to keep families safe, strong and self-reliant.

Community Award Nominees

The 17th Annual Family Tree Celebration of Achievement is not only an opportunity to recognize our clients who have reached self-sufficiency, we also honor individuals and organizations in the community who are working to help children and families be safe, strong and self-reliant.

The Celebration of Achievement Community Award is given to an individual, business, church or civic group that is a special friend of Family Tree. Often, it is a company or organization made up of many dedicated individuals who have stepped forward to give of their time, resources and energy to enrich the lives of others.

Corporate Spotlight

MillerCoors

MillerCoors celebrated their Family Volunteer Day with a bang this past Thanksgiving season. They produced over 175 Thanksgiving food boxes for our clients and distributed them on Saturday, November 21st, almost doubling the number of boxes from years past! This enabled us to reach out to even more individuals and families throughout our programs.

MillerCoors began the food drive in early November by encouraging their staff to start bringing in food items. Many employees took boxes home for their families to decorate and fill with non-perishable food items appropriate for a Thanksgiving dinner.

In addition to employees filling individual food baskets, on Friday, November 20th they organized group volunteer times to decorate boxes, sort food and load for delivery. Early Saturday morning, the MillerCoors truck arrived at Family Tree to distribute the much needed food baskets to our clients.

Family Tree is extremely grateful for MillerCoors' continued dedication and passion for helping people overcome child abuse, domestic violence and homelessness. The Family Volunteer Day was a huge success because of the generosity of the MillerCoors employees and their families!

Story provided by Angie Overlie, Family Tree Director of Corporate Relations.

With over 175 Thanksgiving food boxes for Family Tree clients, MillerCoors came out in full force for Family Volunteer Day on November 20th.

Family Tree Welcomes New Managing Director

Family Tree is pleased to announce a new addition to our management team. Bringing fresh energy and enthusiasm to the agency in 2010 is Judy Hall, Family Tree's new Managing Director of Gifts and Community Support.

Judy comes to Family Tree with over 25-years of non-profit experience in a variety of functions including major gifts solicitation, special event management, corporate/foundation relations, grants management and volunteer management just to name a few.

With a Masters and Doctorate degree in Social Work, Judy wholeheartedly believes in the mission of Family Tree. "Helping families and individuals stay strong and become independent, healthy and successful is something that I fully support," states Judy.

As Managing Director, Judy is responsible for leading the Gifts and Community Support team which includes grants administration; donor relations management; major and planned giving; public relations; marketing; volunteer services; donor database administration; special events and the Treasure Trunk thrift store.

"My main goals are working with our incredible team to strengthen and grow our programs, meet current and new donors and help to make Family Tree the charity of choice in metro Denver and beyond."

Welcome Judy!
